Art Deco Ornamental Ironwork

Art Nouveau, ornamental style of art that flourished between about 1890 and 1910 throughout Europe and the United States. Art Nouveau is characterized by its use of a long, sinuous, organic line and was employed most often in architecture, interior design, jewelry and glass design, posters, and illustration. It was a deliberate attempt to create a new style, free of the imitative historicism ...

Ironwork is commonly supposed to be nearly free of maintenance. Unlike wood work which is religiously subjected to a stern regime of regular painting, ironwork is frequently left to rust undisturbed for long periods, so much so that the only attention that much even important ironwork receives, is periodic major overhaul, at great expense.

Georgian churches combined the architecture of the classical temple with the requirements of Christian worship. One of the most prominent church architects was James Gibbs, who designed London's St Martin in the Fields. The way in which this church combines a classical entrance portico with a steeple rising directly above it, although rather incongruous, was copied by other architects.
