In filmmaking, the 180-degree rule is a basic guideline regarding the on-screen spatial relationship between a character and another character or object within a scene. The rule states that the camera should be kept on one side of an imaginary axis between two characters, so that the first character is always frame right of the second character. Moving the camera over the axis is called ...

Red hat. This hat is all about emotion and intuition. When you wear this hat, you can show your gut reactions to ideas and freely express exactly how you feel. Black hat. When you want to show caution and express a critical viewpoint, this is the hat you want to wear. The black hat will make sure that you steer clear of bad decisions. Yellow hat.

But as I read more of the series, I grew less impressed: turns out Jacques always killed exactly two (count 'em two) lovable characters. The emotion loses some of its punch when it turns out to be formulaic. This is something I'm aware of in my own fiction. I don't want readers to look at a character and say, "Yup, he's doomed."

Logic and reason are important in the persuasion process, but they are not the only techniques. The dark arts of persuasion can prey on emotion, greed, and bias. Learning to write persuasively can help our students to recognize well-made arguments, as well as help to inoculate them against the more sinister manifestations of persuasion.

In Hardboiled Wonderland and the End of the World, Murakami uses a futuristic plot and magical realism to depict the maze-like aspect of Tokyo. In his realist novel, Norwegian Wood, he continues to depict Tokyo as a maze, in which his characters experience “disorientation” and struggle to find the exit. ~ Takagi, Chiaki.

This camera angle serves to amplify emotion. Too many constricted frames can produce claustrophobia in viewers — which can be great inside a sub like “Das Boot,” but not as a general rule. It's usually better to range between three-quarter two-shots (knee-to-head) and normal closeup shots, saving the really tight stuff for special emphasis.

As Ray Bradbury says, don't rewrite—relive. Your fiction is about creating emotion in the reader, and you can't do that well without feeling it yourself. If you did your job right when you were writing the first draft, you opened a vein many times. You didn't just write the story—you felt it. Then, as you were assessing your first ...
