Isn't the airport in Dubai barely above sea level anyways? I mean, if the difference between ground level and sea level is less than a hundred feet, then it seems like it wouldn't account for a plane thinking it was at 4,000 feet when it was really at about 200.

Boeing 777 departing Dubai nearly had a major incident ...

>>Keep in mind that despite this, nothing seriously bad actually happened here. This is the exact wrong way to think about it. With substantial experience with managing risk, the most important thing I know is that you MUST UNDERSTAND the difference between managing risk with knowledge, technology, planning, and skill, vs rolling the dice and getting away with it.
