Dodge B Series Van Front

The first modern Dodge vans, the Forward Control A-vans, lasted until 1970; their success led the company to quickly invest in a follow up series (as it would turn out, the only follow up series). The new vans were named B100, B200, and B300, but are usually just called "the B-vans." They were made in Fenton, Missouri, at the start.

The Dodge B series was a range of full-size vans that were produced by Chrysler Corporation from 1970 to 2003. Through their production, the full-size vans were sold under several different nameplates. Most examples were sold by the Dodge division, although rebadged versions were sold by the now-defunct Fargo and Plymouth divisions. Despite many customer requests, the B-series was not available in the desired 360 V8 model until 1972. Although Chrysler would make two redesigns of the B-platform v

I can speak with experience about Dodge vans from 1999 to 2003, the last year the B series was made. They have a unibody frame and if the vehicle spent much time in the salt belt of the US, I would strongly urge a thorough inspection of the frame, particularly the front frame horns. Ask me how I know.

The Dodge B-series was a full-sized passenger and utility van built by Chrysler Corporation, which replaced the previous smaller A-series compact vans. Dodge followed the lead of the Ford Econoline by moving the engine ahead of the front seats under a short hood, and using truck components. The compact vans were sized to compete with the Volkswagen transporter, with a flat front, the engine was placed between and behind the front seats, and they were based on components from compact cars .
