Joan Hickson (in my book) is the definitive Miss Marple. There have been other actors before (Margaret Rutherford, who blustered her way through it) and after (Geraldine McEwan, who contributed a certain amount of spunk to the role) and later, Julia McKensie, who was a bit too placid for my taste), but Joan Hickson provides just the right mixture of elderly spinster and independent thinker to ...

Miss Marple's relationship with Insp. Craddock is warm but sometimes strained. These films are well directed (with good pace) and are visually pleasing - capitalizing on the British country side (and all things British - tea & tweed). Even the story settings are very British - an old manor, a horse riding establishment, the theatre & the navy. ...
